Part I:

• The interconnectedness between concepts central to the argument here.

• Manifestations of how this interconnectedness is reflected in instances of mediatised user-created content in the Egyptian blogosphere.
Three key concepts:

– User-created content (UCC) in the blogosphere
– Mock-translation
– Popular culture
User-created Content (UCC) in the Blogosphere:

- “creative effort [that is] created outside of professional routines and practices. “

- A blogger is ideally speaking using their skills to present material for others.
  "Reciprocal Attention and Norm of Reciprocity in Blogging Networks.“ Alexia Gaudeul and Chiara Peroni (2010), pp.2230-2.
Mock-translation

• “an utterance in English which is meant to represent a literal translation from an imagined and non-existent" Irish expression.”

• A variety of translation mal-practices such as literal translation, translatorese, and unidiomatic translation.

• “At once familiar and remote”, partly translation, and partly fabrication.

• Assumes an original that does not actually exist
  Garland, p.31
Popular Culture

• “Popular culture, especially, is organised around the contradiction: the popular forces versus the power-bloc.”

• "ideological struggle” between dominant and subordinate cultures, a terrain large enough to include ethnicity, 'race', gender, generations, sexuality.

  Stuart Hall et al (1978), Policing the Crisis, 11.
The interconnectedness between the three concepts of 'mock translation', 'user-created content', and 'popular culture' citizen in the realm of citizen social and political participation.

Carnival Culture:

- "complete system of meaning existing alongside the authoritative world of dominant ideology and social relations."
- “non-official, extra ecclesiastical aspect of the world, a second world outside officialdom.”

Massive wave of stability sweeps through Egypt -- leaves millions dead

Egypt’s new constitution heralds the end of an era of ups and downs and ensures a stable application of the latter.

"A deadly wave of stability swept through Egypt soon after the unrigged results of its constitutional referendum were announced this morning. Millions have reportedly been swept away to their deaths as the stabilizing wave crashed through Egypt’s streets, reducing the heart rate of countless citizens to a very stable zero beats per minute. Nevertheless, the wave is believed to have saved the country by bringing a complete standstill to a dangerous, revolutionary process that threatened to transform Egypt into a non-dictatorship based on atheistic values such as basic women’s rights and similar obscenities."
